

TAPERED FIN ARRAY

Rows of slim, tapered fins lean diagonally in alternating directions, creating a dense chevron-like rhythm across the wall surface. As light rakes across the tiles, the sharp angular edges cast crisp shadow lines that deepen and shift throughout the day giving the wall a sense of constant, quiet movement

BASKET WEAVE BLOCK

Large square blocks are arranged in a classic basket-weave pattern, with alternating groups of raised horizontal and vertical rectangular ribs set within each block. The strong geometry creates deep, layered shadows between each block grouping, giving the wall a bold, tactile quality that reads powerfully from a distance.

TWISTED RIBBON STACK

Tall, slim rectangular tiles are set in a staggered vertical stack, each tile gently bowed or twisted along its length so that light catches different faces at different angles. The result is a subtle, shimmering surface – restrained yet richly textured, reminiscent of hand-laid stone cladding given a contemporary sculptural lift.

CURVED CYLINDER COLUMN

Tall, rounded half-cylinder columns stand side by side in a tight vertical arrangement, their smooth curved surfaces creating a gentle undulating rhythm along the wall. The soft cylindrical profiles catch light across their full width, producing a smooth tonal gradient from highlight to shadow that lends the wall an elegant, almost fabric-like quality.

ORGANIC FREE-FORM MOSAIC

Irregular, free-form tiles with gently curved outlines and fine surface striations are assembled together like a natural mosaic – their edges fitting loosely together with visible joints. The striated surface texture across each piece catches light in varying directions, and since no two tiles are identical in shape, every wall installation is entirely unique and unrepeatable.

SYNCOPATED FLUTE GRID

Fine vertical flutes of varying heights are grouped into square tile modules, with each module rotated 90° relative to its neighbour – so the flutes run vertically in some tiles and horizontally in adjacent ones. This creates a patchwork of light and shadow across the wall, with the flute ridges catching directional light to produce a richly textured, woven-looking surface.

STAGGERED LINEAR BAR

Long, flat rectangular bars are stacked horizontally in a staggered pattern, each bar sitting slightly proud of the ones above and below it. The consistent offset creates a clean barcode-like rhythm with shallow but precise shadow lines running horizontally across the full wall surface – graphic, architectural and effortlessly scalable to large-format applications.

BEVELLED FRAME RELIEF

Each tile presents a recessed rectangular centre framed by a bevelled, chamfered border – like a picture frame pressed into the wall. Set in a staggered brick-bond pattern, the overlapping bevelled edges create a continuous diagonal rhythm of light and shadow, making the surface appear both orderly and dynamic from any angle.

OVERLAPPING FISH SCALE

Rounded square tiles with softly clipped corners overlap one another in a diagonal offset pattern, mimicking the natural layering of fish scales or roof slates. Each tile sits proud of the one below, casting a consistent crescent shadow along its lower edge and creating a surface with strong directional depth that transforms dramatically under raking light.

RECESSED ARCH PANEL

Large flat rectangular panels each feature a deeply recessed arch – a rounded top set within a rectangular frame – carved into the tile face. When tiled together, the arches form an elegant colonnade-like rhythm across the wall, referencing classical architectural niches. The recessed cavity throws a clean, consistent shadow that gives the wall a monumental, restrained quality.

FRACTURED PYRAMID FACETS

Irregular pyramidal and angular facets rise from the tile surface in a composition that mimics the fractured face of rough-hewn stone or crushed quartz. No two adjacent facets share the same pitch or angle, so every panel produces a unique, crystalline play of light – sharp-edged highlights and deep angular shadows that shift as the viewer moves.

INDUSTRIAL RELIEF COMPOSITION

A structured composition of recessed rectangles, raised bars and textured punctured surfaces – combining smooth and rough finishes within a single panel. The result is a bold, graphic relief that references industrial grating and cast iron screens, given warmth through its Terracota colouring and the contrast between smooth-faced blocks and rough-textured insets.

FLOWING SINE WAVE

MONUMENTAL COLUMN FLUTES

Oversized, deeply cut flutes run vertically across large panel sections, broken at intervals by dramatically curved, disc-like interruptions that splay the flutes apart before rejoining them below. This interplay of soaring vertical lines and bold circular breaks gives each panel a monumental, architectural presence — part classical column, part contemporary sculpture.

SCULPTURAL ARCH COMPOSITION

Tall bespoke panels combine full-height arches, half-arches and smooth rounded forms of varying scales, assembled into a sculptural composition that feels part architectural drawing, part abstract relief. Each element has a smooth, plaster-like surface and a different depth, so the grouping creates a layered, dimensional wall that draws the eye to explore its varied profiles.

STEPPED BRICK SLAB

Long, narrow rectangular slabs are laid in a classic running-bond brick pattern, each slab sitting slightly proud of the wall plane with a clean, square-edged profile. The subtle relief depth is consistent across all tiles, so the shadow lines are uniform and precise – producing a wall surface that is quietly textural and architectural without competing with surrounding elements.

DIAMOND PYRAMID GRID

Elongated diamond-shaped pyramids are arranged in a precise, repeating grid – each pyramid rising to a sharp apex from a flat base that meets its neighbours at a clean mitre joint. The regular pattern of pointed peaks and angular valleys creates a strong geometric rhythm, with each pyramid face catching light from a slightly different angle and producing a glittering, faceted surface.

DOUBLE ARCH CHANNEL PANEL

An evolution of the Toran, this larger panel features two full-height arches side by side – each arch deeply recessed within a shared rectangular frame, with a clean raised channel separating them. The double-arch proportion lends the panel a grand, gatehouse-like presence, and at scale the repeated arches create a rhythm reminiscent of colonnaded facades or cathedral cloisters.

DEEP CHANNEL STRIPE

Five deeply cut vertical channels are machined into each tall rectangular panel, creating a bold striped relief with strong shadow depth. The channels are narrow and precisely spaced, so the surface reads as a series of raised stone columns separated by dark recessed grooves – graphic and powerful at scale, with a precision that references both industrial manufacture and classical fluting.

LIFTED PETAL WEAVE

Tall, flat rectangular panels are each split into two halves that curve and lift away from the wall in opposite directions, forming a repeated open V-shape. Arranged in a grid, the lifted edges interlock visually with neighbouring tiles, creating the appearance of woven, petal-like forms that cast deep shadow gaps between each pair – organic and architectural at once.
